World’s Longest Escalators

The world of escalators is quite fascinating, with feats of engineering that push the boundaries of vertical transportation. The Central-Mid-Levels escalator system in Hong Kong holds the record as the longest outdoor covered escalator system globally, stretching over 800 meters and elevating passengers by 135 meters. Meanwhile, in Russia, the St. Petersburg Metro boasts three of the longest continuous single escalators, each extending 453 feet in length and 226 feet in height at the Ploshchad Lenina, Chernyshevskaya, and Admiralteyskaya stations. These remarkable escalators are not just practical solutions for commuting but have also become tourist attractions in their own right, offering unique perspectives of the cities they serve. In the United States, the longest freestanding escalator is found at CNN Studio Tours in Atlanta, Georgia, measuring 58.83 meters. These examples highlight the incredible engineering behind escalators and their importance in modern urban infrastructure.
